Rise in Japan's Military Budget Likely to Be Small

By Clyde Haberman New York Tinus Service

TOKYO — The Japanese gov-ernment, which has been under pressure from the United States to raise its military spending substantially, appears to be about to npprove one of the smallest increases in two decades.

A new national hudget will not be completed for several days, but indications are that military spending may rise at a slower rate than in any year since the Japanese eco-nomic boom began in the 1960s.

The new hudget is expected to be one of no growth, with military spending, aid to Third World countries and energy development among the few areas scheduled for increases. The funds of some government agencies will be slashed by as much as 10 percent.

Shultz Reports No Shift on Missile Talks

By Bernard Gwertzman New York Times Service

OSLO — Secretary of State George P. Shultz said Thursday that his five hours of talks with Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gro-myko of the Soviet Union were worthwhile but made "absolutely no movement" toward resuming negotiations for reducing nuclear missiles.

Speaking to reporters on his Air Force plane as he flew bere for a brief official visit on his way to the United States from Stockholm, Mr. Shultz was more optimistic about the prospects for an early resumption of the East-West negotiations in Vienna on conventional force reductions in Central Europe. In Stockholm, other Western ministers also said that as the result of talks they held with Soviet and East European officials they expected a date to be set soon, perhaps for mid-March. "We discussed arms control issues across the board," Mr. Shultz said, "the thrust of discussions varied from one to another."

The Soviet Union last November quit the negotiations on limiting intermediate-range missiles in Europe because NATO began deploy-ing the first of some 572 new U.S. missiles aimed at offsetting a perceived Soviet advantage in missiles Europe. And last month, the Russians refused to set dates for uming the strategie arms reduction talks in Geneva and the conventional force reduction talks in Mr. Gromyko, in a tough speech to the East-West conference on se-scribed as five probable and two curity that opened in Stockholm this week, repeated that the Russians would only return to the table for the intermediate-range missile talks if NATO removed the missiles already deployed. The U.S. position is that the Soviet Union left the negotiations without good reason and should not be re-warded simply for agreeing to oegotiate again. Mr. Shultz sought 10 leave the

The atmosphere was a bus like one," be said, "We had very strong discussions across a full range of issues and in a straight-forward businesslike atmosphere."

During a five-hour stopover in Oslo. Mr. Shultz met with Foreign Minister Svenn Stray and other officials and had lunch with Norway's king, Olav V.

At a press conference before leaving Oslo, Mr. Sbultz said that he and Mr. Gromyko had not dis-cussed the elections in the United States, when a questioner asked if the Russians expected Mr. Reagan to be re-elected. He also said that he had raised human rights concerns with Mr. Gromyko, but be refused to say if he had asked specifically about Raoul Wallenberg, the Swedish diplomat who was arrested in Hungary in 1945 by the Russians after he bad helped rescue thousands of Hungarian Jews, The Soviet Union says he died in a prison camp but (Continued on Page 2, Col. 4)

Officials See Resumption In Months By John Vinocur

STOCKHOLM - Soviet bloc foreign ministers have suggested to their Western counterparts that the Warsaw Pact is ready to soon reopen the talks on limiting conven-oonal forces in Europe, officials from the Atlantic alliance said

Foreign Minister Giulio Aodreotti of Italy and Foreign Minis-ter Hans-Dietricb Genscher of West Germany said they came away from individual meetings with Foreign Minister Andrei A. ### Carrier on Verge of Bankruptcy After 9 Years of War

By Joseph B. Treaster New York Times Service

BEIRUT - Lebanon's national airline, whose pilots have a reputation for getting passengers to Beirut in all but the most perilous of times, is on the verge of bankruptcy chairman and president of the line, Middle East Airlines, says the only people flying to Lebanon these days are those who have no choice. And for nearly two months last year even those passengers mainly Lebanese, some foreign journalists and a handful of businessmen - were unable to fly because the war had forced the gov-

When the shooting starts, Mr. Salaam said, the airline's executive vice president for operations, Abed Hnteit, goes to the cootrol tower and speaks to his pilots through the air traffic controller.

"We follow the tactics of the Ma-rines," Mr. Salaam said. "They don't shoot all the time. It is intermittent and by salvos, 6, 7, 8 or 10 shots toward the mountains, and then there is a full. During that full we operate. The minute our operations man realizes they are not going to shoot anymore, he lets the flights come in.

There were no lulls in the shooting on Sunday. But 35 minutes after the Druze formally agreed to a truce, an MEA jet bound for Jeddah. Saudi Arabia, was rolling down the runway.

"We feel it is safer to take off immediately than to disembark and expose the passengers to the peer out of their bunkers at Druze shells," Mr. Salaam said. "In other words, the risk is less."

Mr. Salaam says that MEA's 275 pilots, all but 13 of whom are Lebanese, do not take inordinate risks. But he says they fly where others fear to because they have intimate knowledge of the steep mountains and narrow plains around Beirut and because they regard bringing their aircraft home to Lebanon as "doing a national duty."

To stave off financial collapse, the airline has cut the frequency of its flights by 13 percent, has started leasing some of its 21 jet aircraft and has asked its 3,134 Lebanese employees to take a 15-percent cut

The airline is also asking its shareholders, which include Air France and the governments of Kuwait and Oatar, to increase their investment by nearly $14 million.

Troops Move On Workers In Uruguay

MONTEVIDEO - Soldiers removed workers occupying a factory Thursday as the conflict between Uruguay's military government and trade unions escalated follow-

The government also threatened to shut any news organization that published information about the

But union spokesmen dismissed the ban as a sign of weakness. He said that the labor organization, which claims to represent 90 per-cent of the work force, would defy the dissolution order. Witnesses said soldiers armed with rifles and batons ejected 600 workers who had been occupying a factory in Montevideo for several days to demand a salary increase. Demonstrators challenged the government Wednesday night by banging pots in the streets. Witnesses said that in one area troops forced demonstrators into their homes but then withdrew as demonstrators continued the banging from their windows. A few hours later several hundred civil servants demonstrated at the state-owned energy company to Committee for Physical Culture and Sports, criticized preparations protest the dismissal of several for the 1984 Olympics and said that workers who heeded the strike call, witnesses said. They said a uni-formed officer fled the building as ments for Soviet Olympic athletes civil servants shouted anti-military slogans.

> Union spokesmen said the gen eral strike, the first in more than 10 years, had been more successful than expected and that nearly all workers in private industry and business and half the public employees had stopped work.

Union sources said the main union leaders had gone into hiding for fear of being detained. One of them, Andres Toriani, said by telephone that the movement would not be dismantled, despite the decree by the president, Lieutentant General Gregorio Alvarez Armellino. "We believe," he said, that the povernment "has only a short time left in power."

The strike was called to demand better wages, an amnesty for politi-cal prisoners and an early return to democracy. The military has pledged to hold elections next year. Political sources said the leadership of the three legalized parties were discussing a possible condemnation of the government decree. They said the politicians believed the dissolution of the trade union movement, if carried out, would inevitably lead to violence. port for the strike.

danger that the murder of yet another American might be seen as just so much more savagery. But the killing of Malcolm Kerr, president of the American University of Beirut, is a particularly barbaric challenge. Far from qualifying as a fanatic's "nationalist" gesture, it is a grave assault on civilization everywhere.

From its founding by Protestant missionaries in 1866, the American University has played a vital role in the poliocal rebirth of the Middle East. fts first president, Daniel Bliss, eloquently defined its inclusive character: "This college is for all conditions and classes of men without regard to color, nationality, race or religion. A man white, black or yellow; Christian, Jew. Mohammedan or heathen, may enter and enjoy all the advantages of this insotucion ... and go out believing in one God, in many Gods, or in no God."

A Not Un-Fair Tax Plan

One issue that every poliocian, or almost every politician, knows must be addressed in 1985, if not in 1984, is how U.S. taxes should be raised to reduce the federal deficit. No one is willing to go after the deficit this year so long as President Reagan is unwilling to do so and unless some crisis of confidence forces action, as it did in 1982. But almost everyone, maybe even including Mr. Reagan, knows that something will have to be done.

ff taxes are going to be raised, how they are raised becomes the most legitimate of political issues. President Reagan and his Republican comrades have been most unilluminating on how they would go about doing that. So long as Mr. Reagan coyly insists that taxes do not need to go up, few Republicans are going to venture any specifics.

The Democrats - oddly, for a party out of power — seem to be getting more specific. Some of their presidential candidates have advanced tax-increase plans of varying speci-ficity. And the "Democratic blueprint" released recently by the House Democratic Caucus and signed as well by a number of prominent national Democrats comes down foursquare for what it calls the "Fair Tax."

The idea is to simplify the tax code by having just a few different tax rates, lower than today's, with the lowest hracket covering most taxpayers, and abolishing most of the deductions and loopholes that oow clutter the Internal Revenue Code. The loopholes with the largest constituencies would be retained, notably the charitable and mortgage-interest deductions. That detracts from the purity of the proposal but vastly enhances its political feasibility. "There is simply no way to repair the present code," say the Democrats, and so they have come up with a plan less progressive than the income tax started off being but more progressive than the value-added tax some Republicans are rumored to favor.

Where these Democrats go, the presidential candidates may follow. This proposal answers one of their poliocal imperatives: They must come up with a macroeconomic policy different from Reagan plans and from past Democratic plans, all of which, they must argue, have failed. Just promising to close the deficit is not enough; how many voters' hearts pound when they hear Democrats make that promise? Nor is the phrase "industrial policy" doing for the Democrats what many strategists and would-he economic advisers hoped. The Democrace blneprint mendons in passing the need for government to work together with business, but its specific proposals are either airy (such as an Economic Cooperation Council) or unsurprising (beef up the infrastructure). What will surprise some is that this election-year document is a work of substance. It gives important clues to what the Democrats would do in power, and on taxes it advances the political debate to a level of specificity which, unfortunately, Mr. Reagan and his party in power have yet to match.

Reagan and the Kremlin

The Soviet foreign minister said oo to new NATO missiles to match the SS-20s; he said no to talks about reducing both sides' arsenals. no to the Stockholm disarmament conference becoming a turning point in East-West rela-tions, and oo to President Reagan's offer to reestablish dialogue.

Those who rush to condemn Mr. Reagan for electioneering, insincerity, and worse, over his shift in policy toward Moscow should do well to remember that the Soviet leader has not been in his office for a full five months.

ft may well be that Mr. Reagan has backed the [Soviet] bear into a corner over the past three years. His offer of dialogue enables it to shuffle out with a little dignity.

- The Daily Telegraph (London). Apparently, with the election coming up and all the arms talks in recess. President Reagan fears he has carried insult ton far and that a verbal armistice will bring the Russians hastening to consider "common interests" and toward peace in the world.

There are substantial differences between the Vatican and the headquarters of other world religions. The sheer size and near universality of the Catholic Church is one. Secondly, the Vatican is a political entity as well as a religous one. While the city-state of the Vatican is tiny, it once occupied a much larger territory that was ceded to Italy. As a result, 106 nations in addition to the United States have formal diplomatic relations with the Holy See. Indeed, several Communist countries have ambassadors in Rome. Why? Certainly, the tiny Vatican city-state is not a nation in any significant sense. But we have seen a generation of popes who have been world peace. Certainly, oo other world leader communicates with the many peoples of the world as effectively as Pope John Paul II.

Syria Holds All the Cards

American efforts to discover greater flexibility and moderation in Syria's position on Lebanon have failed. Donald H. Rumsfeld. the special U.S. envoy, has reported oot only no success but also a stiffening in Syria's line. Damascus has clearly calculated that it can get what it wants in Lebanon without the bother of making any substantial concessions, and that indeed its interests will be furthered by showing just how uncompromising it can be.

Syria is not only seeking to assure itself a position of strong influence or even dominance in Lebanon. It also perceives the opportunity for added political benefits by demonstrating that it faced down the United States. This is the bitter pill that it is holding out to Washington. Damascus knows that President Reagan, in an election year, cannot afford to keep the marines at their thankless and onerous task in Berut much longer. Damascus is also aware of the popular, political and now even military pressures building in Israel to end what has become a costly and unreward-

1909: An Irish Bog Disaster

LONDON — A visit paid to the scene of the great bogslide at Ballygar, County Galway, revealed the fact that the catastrophe was on a much greater scale. The entire face of the district has been altered, well-defined rivers and roads have disappeared, and landmarks familiar to the peasantry for a lifetime have been submerged. Over a hundred acres of land that were previously under grass are now covered with at least 12 feet of oozing bog. The bog was moving at the rate of about five miles an hour. The greatest sympathy is expressed for the poor sufferers, whose loss is not confined to their houses and stock, for the land oow covered by the bog, which slowly but surely is piling up, is gone forever.

1934: A Failed Revolution in Lisbon

LISBON - Attempts by Communists and Syndicalists to bring about a revolution by calling a general strike have failed, the Lisboo political police said. The plot came to a head during the night [of Jan. 18], when two bombs exploded in the streets, and an attack was made by the revolutionaries on the police barracks in the Chelas quarter. Police opened fire on the attackers, who were repulsed. A train was derailed at Pova Santairia, near Lisbon, and three persons were injured. Several bombs exploded in various parts of Lisbon. but without causing casualoes. Lisboo is virtually normal today. Factories are open and trams and trains are running, but police and Republican Guards are on guard.

The American Negotiator's View of the Geneva Talks

The truth or falsity of any statement is only of secondary interest to him. After a period of time, I came to think I could generally, though not always, sort the true from the false in what he said.

agreed to attempt to develop a complete package of reciprocal concessions that, if accepted by both governments, would resolve all the principal outstanding issues. This would be done without commitment by either government. The result was the "walk in the woods" formula that essentially would have restricted each side to oo more than 75 missile launchers and precluded deployment of U.S. Pershing-2 missiles in the Eu-ropean area, and would have frozen Soviet launchers at 90 in Soviet Asia.

I heard oothing from the Soviet side during the summer break. Then, in September 1982, in a private meeting. Mr. Kvitsinsky handed me a copy of his instructions flatly rejecting all the principles on which the "walk in the woods" formula was based. During the following year, the talks were largely stalemated.

During the early summer of 1983, Mr. Kvitsinsky told me that he considered the round beginning in September to be the one in which the "end game" would be played out. He told me that during the summer recess he would be working on his instructions for that "end game."

The "end game" began Sept. 22 with President Reagen's offering substantial concessions on limiting aircraft: on including in effect, a sub-ceiling on U.S. intermediate-range missiles in Europe within a global ceiling on such missiles; and on allocating reductions between Pershing-2s and cruise missiles.

The Oct. 27 edition of Prayda carried an interview with Yuri V. Andropov offering to reduce Soviet SS-20 deployments in Europe to 140, to halt further SS-20 deployments in the Far East upon the entry into force of an agreement limiting intermediate-range missiles in Europe, and to change Moscow's proposal on limiting aircraft to something not too far from Mr. Reagan's aircraft proposal

Mr. Kvitsinsky fold me about the Andropov interview at a dinner party
Oct. 26. Later that evening he surprised me by saying. "Why, don't you propose equal reductions?" I reminded him that a year carlier, he had told me this idea was unacceptable to Moscow. He then said his present idea was different, that it would being Soviet SS-20 launchers in Europe down to f20, and, more importantly, provide a way around the issue of compensation for British and French systems. Some days later, I asked him age to the second second second second to clarify his position.

On Nov. 12, Mr. Kvitsinsky called and asked to meet me the next mornand asked to meet me the next morning. At that meeting he said that he was instructed to tell me that if Washington proposed equal reductions in Europe by 572 on both sides. Moscow would accept the proposal. Mr. Kvitsinsky, curiously, has since characterized that proposal as one that I had initiated.

Of course, this formulation perpetnated the Soviet insistence on retaining a monopoly of mtermediaterange missiles against zero for the NATO alliance, a position we have always rejected. So, I told him I could not imagine that Washington would accept this, but that I would immediately tell Washington what he had said. I did. Washington informed our North Atlantic Treaty Organization allies. On Nov. 17, the Soviet Embassy in Bonn delivered a note to the West German government saying that I — not the Russians — had proposed reductions to about 120 missiles on the Soviet side and zero-on the American side and that Washington was likely to reject my proposal. Later, similar notes were delivered to other NATO governments.

The episode had a peculiar Byzantine character that is alien to serious diplomacy. There appear to have been two purposes to these machina-tions. The first was to permit Moscow to deny, if necessary, that it had abandoned what has been a cornerstone of its propaganda campaign in: Europe — insistence on including British and French nuclear forces in any INF agreement. The second to sow doubts in NATO ranks along American conduct, especially coming consultation with our alies.

At the beginning of the round, there were four critical issues. The first and central issue was that of the balance of intermediate-range missile deployments in Europe between the sides. The second was the question of compensation for British and French submarine-launched ballistic missile systems -- the Soviet rationale for a wholly one-sided outcome on the first issue. The third was the question of Soviet INF deployments in Soviet Asia. The fourth was Soviet insistence on radical limits in Europe on American aircraft capable of carrying unclear and nonnuclear weapons limits that would have emasculated the U.S. contribution to the conventional defense of NATO Europe.

During the final days, it looked as if both sides had moved close enough to see light at the end of the tunnel on looked as if the second issue could be surmounted or avoided. That left only the first issue. I hoped that with a little more time, we might find a way through that issue as well. On Nov. 15, Britain announced the arrival, as planned, of cruise missiles at Greenham Common. On Nov. 22, the Bundestag voted to realism support for deployments in West Germany. On Nov. 23, Mr. Kvitsinsky terminated the round without agreeing to a date for resumption. The New York Times.

Buying Front-Row Seats in the Vatican

ROME - President Reagan's By George Armstrong decision last week to nominate William A. Wilson as the first U.S. ambassador to the Vatican is an event of some historical interest, but dubious utility. Actually, the young United States enjoyed diplomatic relations with the Papal States, meaning Rome and Latium, which were governed by the pope and the Roman Curia until Garibaldi & Co. entered Rome in 1870 as part of their campaign to unify the Italian nation.

Rome's British and American colonies were quite large at that time, though their situation was constrained. The Anglo-American residents held separate church services in private homes, and Protes-tants could only be huried outside the city walls - as was the poet John Keats. The papal gendarmes knew what was going among the Protestants on Sunday mornings, since they maintained the Napoleonic traditioo of employing coocierges as police informers. In 1867, a rumor - never substantiated - had reached Washington that the pope was going to force the Protestants to hold their church services outside the city walls. The United States was then in the grip of one of those periodic spasms of nativist anti-Catholicism that were endemic to 19th-century America, and Congress readily passed a statuse forbidding the use of federal funds to maintain relations with the Papal States. So things remained cism and member of Mr. Reagan's kitchen cabinet. You may ask what, in heaven's name, do the more than 100 ambassadors now accredited to the Vatican do? They show their country's flag, if they are to attend formal Valican ceremonies, they are ex-pected to wear white ties and tails —even at 10 A.M. —or "national uniforms," which permits the occasional kilt or leopard-skin robe. Wives must wear only black. Most of these ambassadors do a lot of lying about: They are likely to be their country's ambassador to both the Vatican and another country, such as Switzerland or Malta. One diplomat, until recently accredited to the Valican, said that his dispatches were similar to those filed from other posts "but on a dinkier scale." He read the Vatican and stalian press, "and I listen to gossip, of which there is an awful lot, just as there is in any despotic, albeit benevolent, regime."

nications, all that any country real-ly needs abroad is an efficient conlar service (to process passports, visas, birth and death registrations) a commercial section (to encourage imports and exports), and spies, who can always be hired locally. None of those above essential services can be rendered to U.S. citizens by the proposed coming U.S. Embassy to the Holy Sec. Even ockets for a papal audience, once a chore for visitors to obtain now can be had from one's local bishop before leaving home.

But according to Mr. Wilson's deputy, Donald Plenty, one of the major benefits to the United States of his chief's elevation will be "in seating." He explains that when the pope is presiding over a religious service or a diplomatic reception, the ambassadors accredited to the Vatican get the best seats. Mr. Wilson's seat is at the back.

Unless organized Protestantism gets its hackles up over Wilson's commetion, the United States shortly will join the others with an ambassador at the Papal Court. Aside from the expense of maintaining still another embassy, the fact itself does not matter, though it is a matter of comfort to the Vatican that the United States has opted for first-class seating.

What ANC Wants

In the second of two reports on South Africa, entitled "Pretoria Chooses Force to Deal With Guerrillas," (IHT, Jan. 5), Glenn Frankel of The Washington Post rightly refers to the African National Congress

as "the main South African resistance movement."

But in your paper's headline and in his story you use the words "guerti-las" and "terrorism" in connection with the South-West Africa People's Organization, or SWAPO, as well 25 in describing the ANC. You quote South Africa's military chief of stall. General Constand Viljoen, talking about a "revolutionary ouslaught by the ANC.

But who is responsible for the raids and ouslaught if not Pretoria? The ANC's aims are simple: citzenship for the majority in the country of their birth, an end to racial partiers, and a one-man, one-vote system. Why call that revolutionary?

ARIS — After many years of effort, longer than it took Proust to write his great novel, "Remembrance of Things Past" was finally filmed in Paris last summer and will be released next month. The film is based on the "Swann in Love" episode, with to clarify his position.

The Man I have that it would be released to the "Swann in Love" episode, with the clarify his position.

North Atlantic Treaty of the Nov. 17, the Soviet to the sake of copyright, there can't be a remake of a film for 20 years. Too bad, there's not one way to read Proust, that's for sure."

Getting just the one version done has been hard enough. The French producer Nicole Stephane, who acquired the rights from Proust's niece in 1962, was in despair until Schlöndorff said yes after projects with Visconti, Losey and Peter Brook had fallen through and after most of the leading French directors had turned her down.

"For some reason French directors either respect or despise literature so much that they would rather take any old American crime story and turn it into a film." Schlöndorff says.
"My best friends, like Louis Malle and Bertrand Tavernier, kept saying I was completely nots to get toto it. They never resented it when I made films of Boll or Grass, but Proust - you're not supposed to touch him, it's some sort of oational thing here.'

Nicole Stephane, who sold her rights to the French and German backers in order to get the film produced, agrees. "One mustn't touch Proust although one can slice Stendhal or Victor Hugo to bits." Schlöndorff points out that there is one good reason why only a foreigner would dare take on Proust: "A French director who did it and failed could oot walk through Paris any more, whereas a foreigner could Schlöndorff was born in Wiesbaden in 1939 and commutes between Munich and Pigalle, where he lives opposite the writer Jean-Claude Carrière, a chum since the days of Louis Malle's "Viva Maria," on which Schlöndorff, who went to the IDHEC film school in Paris, was an assistant. Carrière wrote the Proust script along with Marie-Helène Estienne and Peter Brook, who contributed the crucial idea of having the action take place in one day. Schlöndorff did the final adaptation Schlöndorf I's greatest success was his Oscar-winning adaptation of the Günter Grass novel "The Tin Drum." He also has brought works by Robert Musil, Marguerite Yourcenar and Heinrich Böll to the screen. He says he began filming fiction by chance. "But probably after so many years, you can't call it chance any more. I feel most stimulated by books, books that I take up again and again, not the other ones that you just read and forget. It's very exciting to work with a good text, that's the first thing. Sometimes you come up with a result and sometimes not, but the more demanding a text is, the better for you - it's just a quescion of labor, the more you look for a solution the more chance you have to come up with something interesting."

His oext film will have an original script and will be a saure on an East-West disarmament conference in Switzerland. In the hope of finding the secret of 1930s comedy, he asked the late Walter Reisch, who wrote "Ninotchka," to do a draft. "The problem with comedy is you really need a good script," he says. "With literature you can invent a lot of things during the filming, but in comedy it has to exist before."

Schlöndorff says the French consider him very German and the Germans consider him not entirely German, while be sees himself more like Woody Allen's Zelig. Known to be difficult on the set, he is friendly and hright over tea: It is, be says, the first time he has spoken in a relaxed and detached fashion about the Proust film. It is probably a question of timing: The moment of truth, when the film is finally shot, is over, and the moment of untruth, when the finished product is hyped, has oot yet

This is the editing time when the footage is assembled and the sound track added; a time when dream and reality confroot each other and when thousands of disparate pieces fall into place, exactly how Schlöodorff cannot explain.

"What is the magic that holds Proust together? There is no story, there are no conflicts, no devices. Through a poetry and magic and inner flow he passes from one time to another. The shooting was easy, now when you're putting the pieces together, you have to find that inner flow. In The Tto Drum' and "The Lost Honor of Katharina Blum' it was all speed and contrast. This is like a puzzle dooe in fractions of a second because you don't have a motor that is pushing it along,"

Shooting, says Schlöndorff, is a time of passion. "You hate an actor, you love a dress. Editing is mainly to preserve what you have, to Volker Schlöndorff with extras on the set of "Swann in Love."

You don't always know what you have. Working with his editor, Schlöndorff has found himself using rejected takes or giving up cherished ideas, such as the premise that Swann is really very active, a seducer. "I finally gave in," he says. "Swann is a passive character, be is suffering but he oever does anything about it. He is oot like a Latin lover

"It won't be a complicated editing, it should be very simple and smooth. As one might expect, it will insist more on the moments when nothing is happening rather than create action. It is just oot possible to turn Proust into an aetioo storyteller," Schlöndorff adds, laughing, "I tried, it doesn't work."

To Schlöndorff the film is not about love or jealousy but about futility, the sort of downbeat statement that makes possible exhibitors

"Yes," be says, "hut I don't mean to sell it. It can sell itself. Sometimes in other films one doesn't say these things in interviews, you censor yourself. But I think this is a demanding film and people are willing to go for it or not. I don't mean that it is difficult because it is in no way intellectual. It is completely sensual, there's not much dialogue. It is more lyrical and the music has an important part.

"I hope it doesn't look too much like a costume piece. You can feel that people are wearing the costumes of a certain period but the film is not a period piece. It is more as if it were unreal, it has something of a dream about it. Because we were able to do it entirely on location, Swann and Odette are more like ghosts haunting these Paris stones. That sounds even more off-putting," he adds, "but it's probably the best thing

His cast features Alain Deloo as Charlus, Jeremy Irons as Swann and Ornella Muti as Odette. "I don't really like the mishmash of actors. Normally Proust should be an entirely French cast and it was oot for commercial reasons that I decided on Ornella and Jeremy. It's a omplete contradiction of my own principle; I just thought they were the best fitted for it."

The Italian Muti, previously known as a sex kitten, is said to be an excellent surprise. "You can see what you want in her," Schlöndorff says, "sometimes this incredible sensuality, sometimes a great melancholy. She changes throughout the film all the time so that, like Swann we oever know what to think of her."

The film is set to 1885 with its angular, rather perverse fashions Schlöndorff thinks it could be set today. "I know so many Swanns who are running through La Coupole and other places looking for this or that lady they are infatuated with, and then always these lacades and these French salons with everyone talking and if somebody is having an emotion you are considered a nuisance. You are not supposed to French society to have an emotion, much less show it."

"Swann in Love" was shot in only 43 days. The long wait in making it, the problems of financing all seem now a necessary part of the proce "In a way I think the difficulties were well-deserved," Schlöndorff says. "I mean you can't get away with Proust that easily, you know — shoot it and put it together and take your money and run. You know it's

"It came as a complete surprise," the 62-year-old author says.

In Canada, where she chose to live, nationalism has been a byword in the arts for the last two decades, and the English-speaking literary establishment did not rush to recognize this writer who was born and bred in the Deep South, which influenced her fiction as much as her accent and manner. If there is a central theme to her writing, it is her concern with justice. She was among the first contemporary American novelists to write about the injustice of the treatment of blacks in the South. "From an early age, I didn't like the way the blacks were treated and I didn't like the explanations I received [about their

When she works on a novel, Spencer maps out the plot and characters. "You have to think it out pretty well to advance," she says. "You can't just rely on character and impulse." She rewrites until she obtains the "strong firm style" she seeks.

Spencer is often praised for this strong, consistent tone, which she says took years to achieve. Like other writers from the South, she admits she was "overwhelmed by the presence of Faulkner, and it took time to shake off that and other influences."

Dance and Music: An Uneasy Alliance

by Jack Anderson

T EW YORK - Let's ponder three statements. First, there is George Balanchine's description of music as a "floor for dancing." The second comes from an essay that the late Edwin Denhy wrote in 1945 in which he foresaw a new dance classicism that would stir audiences "by the act of dancing and not, as the fashion was from 1910 to 1940, by opposing to that act obstacles of various kinds of mimicry." The third remark was made by Hugo Fiorato, one of the New York City Ballet's conductors, a meeting of the Dance Crities' Association. Balanchine, said Fiorato, did not "just put movements on top of a score, he added a oew dimension to it."

Today, in both hallet and modern dance, many "obstacles" of plot, symbolism and dramatic pantomime have been swept away and a choreographic work may consist of nothing but dancing to music. Yet, often, such works are facile and pointless. Music - or, to put it more exactly, a certain approach to music may now constitute a new obstacle to choreographic expression

There are commentators who praise works that consist solely of steps to music as exam-ples of "pure dance." But there are times when some things can be so pure as to be colorless or tasteless. At their simplest, pure-dance compo-sitions are little more than displays of energy. In more sophisticated examples of the form, a dance composition offers a visual and kinetic equivalent of a musical composition as trans-lated into some balletic or modern-dance technique. But seldom does this choreography add new dimensions to a score; it simply puts choreographic linoleum on the floor for danc-

Although there exist a few choreographers who, like John Neumeier, appear to believe that choosing monumental pieces of music will bring about monumental choreography, most choreographers are modest and avoid grandiose symphonies and oratorios. Yet their tact may result in a work as simultaneously wellcrafted and dismaying as Helgi Tomasson's "Ballet d'Isoline," to musie by Andre Messager, for the New York City Ballet, a piece that is little more than pretty steps to pretty tunes. Such a ballet may be "pure." Yet it also seems inconsequential."

Although they may exploit dancers' technical skills, choreographers are sometimes sur-prisingly hesitant to offer distinctively personal interpretations of musical scores. Yet, presumably, the scores they choose must mean something important to them. And since no piece of music inevitably requires choreography - music being a self-sufficient art - if choreographers have nothing interesting to say about a piece of music, they might as well leave it unchoreographed.

It is worth noting that, in public statements, Balanchine would disdain fancy toterpretations of his ballets and speak as if choreography simply involved setting appropriate steps to a piece of music. But it would be foolish to take his remarks too hterally. Balanchine's ballets constitute a remarkable set of ehoreographie visions, raptures, ordeals, quests and exaltations. Balanchine even altered music to suit his own expressive purposes. Thus he lopped off the first movement of Mendelssohn's score for "Scotch" Symphony and reversed the order of the last two movements of "Screnade," even though the reversal destroys the formal symmetry of Tchaikovsky's composition. However, that same reversal hrings the ballet to an achingly beautiful conclusion.

Music, traditionally the choreographer's ally, is in danger of becoming the choreographer's master and what was initially a liberating classicism may be turning into a stultifying academicism. To prevent this from happening, choreographers should be encouraged to work directly with musical collaborators so that the creative process can be a mutually rewarding dialogue between dedicated artists.

Balanchine may have insisted upon notions of aesthetic impersonality so that he could be free to fill his works with any personal feelings he wished without fearing that viewers would automatically regard each new hallet as a choreographic confession or gossip column. In so doing he resembles T.S. Eliot, whose critical theories scorned mere self-expression, but whose poetry coocerned deeply personal moral and religious struggles. What is important in both Balanchine and Eliot is oot the letter of their theories, but the spiritual fire that transfigures their works.

In addition to avoiding personal interpretanons of music, choreographers can treat music too reverently. When Peter Martins began choreographing a work to Rossini chamber music for the New York City Ballet, he may have realized that one piece of music was insufficient for a baller on the scale that he wished. Therefore, he utilized two pieces and the result was "Rossini Quartets." But the two pieces he chose are so similar as to cancel each other out when one immediately follows the other. Martins tried hard to make "Rossini Quartets' interesting to look at, but it became dull to listen to. The late John Cranko ran into a comparable problem when he voked two Bach concertos together for his "Brandenhurg Nos. 2 and 4" for the Royal Ballet.

In contrast, in his "Esplanade," to Bach, and his "Aurcole" and "Airs," to Handel, Paul Taylor takes individual movements from several different concertos and arranges them in a new order. This may horrify pedants. Yet the musical rearrangements make possible some unusually inventive ehoreography. These days, abstraction is fashionable and oo choreographer wishes to get mired in allego-ry or snarled to subplots. Even so, choreographers often appear to be unusually ill at ease when they use music that was either written for some specific theatrical purpose or given programmatic significance by its composer. If the taste of our time may make chorcographers avoid explicitly programmatic dances, their respect for music may make them feel that they must indicate their awareness of a score's program, if it originally had one. However, the choreographic results may be too pallid to be satisfactory as dance-drama, yet too annoyingly allusive to allow one to regard the work solely as an abstraction.

For instance, there's Joseph Duell's "La Crèation du Monde," for the New York City Ballet. Milhand wrote this score for a 1923 ballet about African mythology. Duell had no desire to imitate that scenario. Yet, apparently, he felt he ought to acknowledge that be was familiar with the score's history. So his ballet does contain moments suggesting tribal rituals. Unfortunately, they are introduced so reticently that they have little impact.

Music, traditionally the choreographer's ally, is in danger of becoming the choreographer's master and what was initially a liberating classicism may be turning into a stultifying academicism. To prevent this from happening, choreographers should be encouraged to work directly with musical collaborators so that the creative process can be a mutually rewarding dialogue between dedicated artists. If nothing else, commissioned scores may free choreographers from the constant necessity of having to tailor dances to the structural demands of such traditional forms as the sonata or concerto.

The dance arranger — someone who adapts another composer's music for dancing - can also be of help. A sensitive arranger can make existing pieces of music sound as if they had been especially composed for dancing. Thus Simon Sadolf's arrangement of Purcell intensi-fies the power of Jose Limon's "The Moor's Pavane." And certain arranged dance scores are so attractive that they are even occasionally heard to concert: among them, William Wal-ton's arrangement of Bach for Frederick Ashton's "The Wise Virgins," Vincenzo Tommasi-ni's arrangement of Scarlatti for Léonide Massine's "The Good-Humored Ladies" and Manuel Rosenthal's arrangement of Offen-bach for Massine's "Gaite Parisienne."

Finally, it should not be forgotten that "pure dance" is only one of many valid forms of dance and that whenever any single form becomes stultified, it may be time to reinvestigate the possibilines of another. Of course, the only real solution to choreographic problems is choreographic imagination. But if all choreographers possessed that to abundance, no one would need to worry about how they used

Discovering the Finns in 3 Helsinki Museums

TANDEN AT THE PARTY OF THE PART

by David Binder

ELSINKI - On the landing between the first and second floors of the Mannerheim Museum in Helsinki, a visitor hearkens to the muffled clip-clop of ... could it be a herd of reindeer from a nearby forest? The sound deepens to a steady rumble until the felt-slippered feet of a sturdy group of elderly Finnish women comes into view, maybe 50 of them, paying homage to the man they revere as the father of Finland: Field Marshal Carl Gustav Manner-

For Finland, a country of 5 million, the Mannerheim Museum is the closest thing there is to a national shrine; for a visitor, his Helsinki home provides a capsule history of what is surely one of Europe's least approached and most approachable peoples: the Finns.

Situated in a far northern corner of the continent, with a population speaking a lan-guage that cannot be divined by knowledge of cognates in any major Indo-European lan-guage, Finland would, by most definitions in the lower latitudes, be remote. To foreigners the Finns present themselves as an outdoors people who make the most of a harsh climate, practice rough individualism, keep clean with their saunas, excel at sports, crafts and textiles, pay their debts on time and live with admirable self-assurance within growling distance of the great Russian bear

Visitors can easily absorb themselves in the Finnish delights of cross-country skiing, sailing in a seemingly endless archipelago, hiking the mossy forest trails and, in summer, playing tennis or dancing under the midnight sun. But to find out who the Finns are and whence they emerged, a little history helps, and it can be acquired pleasurably by visiting three of Helsinki's museums, all of which provide guidebooks, guides and exhibition case labels employing English.

To begin with: the museum of Mannerheim, whose titles - regent, field marshal and president - convey only a whisper of the man's accomplishments. A quintessential European, he was born in 1867 of Finnish-Swedish-Dutch ancestry, became a cavalry officer in the imperial Russian army and after distinguished combat service in the Russian-Japanese War and World War I, led the troops that made possible the creation of an independent Finnish republic in 1919. As if that were not enough, in his 70s he commanded the Finnish armies that stood off the Soviets in two epic struggles during World War II and then be-came Finland's first postwar president.

Of Swedish background and serving the Russian czar, to emerge as Finland's greatest patriot — confusing? Perbaps oot, if one recalls that George Washingtoo served the Brit-isb crown until 1776 or that, in our own time, Tito fought for the Austro-Hungarian emperor before becoming the father of Communist Yu-narrow canvas field cot, swords, rifles, bootjacks, a gray-and-black summer uniform the marshal designed himself and dozens of handmade tributes of wood, straw and metal from admiring Finns and from Russian prisoners grateful for merciful treatment after capture in the Winter War of 1939-40.

The museum displays rich memorabilia from every phase of Mannerheim's valiant life:

Were it for the martial objects alone, the collection would suffice as remarkable, but there is more, for Mannerheim was an inspired collector and avid reader; his shelves contain several thousand books in English, German, Russian, French and Swedish, languages in which he was fluent.

Most striking about the Mannerheim colleca portrait of his wife of 11 years. Anastasia tion is the discovery that, for all his obligations Arpova, daughter of a Russian general; his as a military commander and statesman, he found time to pursue a deep interest in ethnography. It was the byproduct of an assignment from the Russian general staff in 1906 to scoot the northwestern frontier territories of China on a journey that took him 8,750 miles (about 14,200 kilometers) on horseback over the next two years, from Turkestan to Beijing, during which he wore out all eight of his original Cossack companions. Along the way he took several thousand photographs, some of which can be seen on the museum's slide projector. His intelligence task was to assess the potential of China's forces a year after the Japanese, in beating the Russians, had shocked the world by becoming the first Asian nation to defeat a Caucasian power. It was a time when European monarchs and their propagandists were conjuring up the Yellow Peril.

Mannerheim returned with many photographs of Asian troops in training, which must have satisfied his Russian superiors, and just as many of priests and princesses and mud-walled villages. He also returned with a trove of oriental valuables: carpets, silk screens, gold tile from the grand mosque of Samarkand and. carved Tibetan Buddhas. It is one of the greatest collections of Asian art in all Europe.

One object above all others holds a magnetic fascination for Finns: a painting of white-camouflaged Finnish ski troops on their bellies in the snow of a deep forest, rifles at the ready. It was done more than 80 years ago by Akseli Gallen-Kallela in response to a repressive Russian edict and, for all its plainness, was a prophecy of how the Finns would successfully defend themselves against the Soviet juggernant 40 years later, in 1939. It was given in the 1920s to Mannerheim, who would command those defenders.

Finns like to tell Mannerheim stories, perhaps as fondly as Americans tell stories about George Washington, true or apocryphal. Here is one: During World War II a Wehrmacht general was invited to dine at the field mar-shal's table. A chain-smoker, the German looked in vain for an ashtray, not knowing that the Mannerheim manner was to permit smoking only after coffee and brandy had been served. "May one smoke?" the Wehrmacht officer nervously inquired while the meal was still under way. "I don't know," Mannerheim replied coolly. "It's never happened before."

Mannerheim's soldiers in the Finnish for-ests preserved the nation's indepen-dence at a cost of 80,000 lives. In the struggle they killed more than a million Soviet troops. You can hear the soldiers' cheerful songs from recordings played in a reproduction of a windowless front-line log bunker from the Winter War in the Military Museum of the Finnish Defense Forces. They are the songs of Jermu, (pronounced YERR-moo), the tough Finnish equivalent of GI Joe: foxtrots, a tango, marches and waltzes. The fragrance of pine resin hangs in the air as the eye takes in a kerosene lantern, belmets on bunks, mess kits on an iron stove and infantrymen's long under-

In a country that practices neutrality as much as it has preached it for the last four decades, it is astonishing to encounter these martial memories, the more so in the peaceable atmosphere of the capital, where few uniforms are in evidence.

Yet Finns seem to relish stories of military prowess. One of the hit records of four years ago was "Hakkaa Paale" or, roughly, "Make Hash of Them!" — a battle cry of the Finnish dragoons serving in the Royal Swedish Army of the Thirty Years' War. It may even be the etymological ancestor of a German expression for hash, Hackepeter, since the Germans first heard it from charging Finnish cavalrymen in the baule of Lützen in 1632.

INTERNATIONAL DATEBOOK

On my arrival in Finland, my host, Matti Kohva, a journalist, marched up and down in his apartment to the battle tunes that have become known as "Hakkaa Paale" and then sang along with them. Several years ago Kohva had accompanied some Finnish war veterans to the Soviet Karelian capital of Petrozavodsk; which their battalion had captured, to the square where they had happily dynamited a buge statue of Stalin," to the ruins of a distillery where "5,000 Finns liberated 10,000 liters vodka" and to the monument to what a Russian guide described as "18 of our brave boys killed in a sneak attack by White Finnish Mannerheim Fascists — we didn't know who."

Kohva recalled that one of the visiting veter-ans went into a mock crouch as if holding a submachine gun. "I did it!" he shouted, sarcastically. "Rat-tat-tat-tat!" The guide went pale

Such old-boy hijinks aside, the Military Museum, with displays from its collection of 60,000 items in the brick barracks of the former First Rifle Battalion of Uusimaa, provides an easily absorbed short tour through Finnish history, from the 600 or so years of Swedish rule through the period as a grand duchy of Russia from 1809 to 1917 and into indepen-

Most compelling for cootemporaries is the exhibition relating to World War II, which, along with the Jermu bunker, is highlighted by what must be some of the most dramatic blackand-white battlefield photographs ever made. A visitor is told that combat photography had been a top priority of the Finnish armed forces. The results are there, tazor sharp and somber: white snow and muzzle flashes, gray faces of infantrymen and nurses and flame-blackened trees and buildings.

Nor is any animosity toward Finland's foes evident. For example, the Military Museum displayed an exhibition of Masterpieces of Russian Armorers from Leningrad's Hermitage collection for four months earlier this year. The Finns appear to look upon the Russians as worthy adversaries, and vice versa, to judge from Russian comments in the visitors book.

After nearly 40 years of peace in Europe, even if it is a heavily armed peace, it may come as something of an affront for the visitor to study history, so to speak, through the barrel of a gim or down the edge of a saber. For the Finns, however, who took shape as a nation rather late in European terms - in the 12th century — who acquired some political recog-nition three centuries later from Sweden, who developed a sense of national identity only in the last century and statehood in this century, military history is national history.

On a taxi ride across Mannerheim Street. there was an explosion in a deep excavation where workers were dynamiting the blackstreaked pink granite rockbed for an underground passageway. A large chunk of rock fell on a car ahead of us, crushing its bood. Without batting an eye the driver turned and said, "Bad luck, but he will collect insurance." The evenness of his tone gave me the idea that Finns take explosions in stride as a part of everyday life, which might ciplain why they seem so comfortable with their military past.

or a relatively peaceful change, the visitor may choose the National Museum of Finland, a block and a half north of the stolid granite Parliament building on Mannerheim Street, a main artery leading to the center of the city. It is a smorgasbord of a structure designed in 1902 by three Finnish architects in what was called the national romantic style meaning that every gnart and curlique of local vintage, along with neoclassical nonsense, has been incorporated. Inside it is a straightfor-

The visitor learns that, following the Ice Age and entering the Stone Age, about 9,000 years ago, bumans began habitation in Finland A thousand years later, judging by relics on display, the inhabitants were making rather elaborate fishnets. In any case fish remains the staple of the Finnish diet today.

Antochthonous forefathers of the presentday Finns are presumed to have appeared about the time Jesus was born, those of Finno-Ugrian origin perhaps in the vicinity of the Ural Mountains having migrated earlier to the lower Baltic seacoast. Archaeological finds have been facilitated by the fact that Finland as a whole is rising at a relatively swift pace, so that former harbor slips and early coastal settlements now lie well above sea level.

Museum exhibits that impressed me were a chimneyless and windowless farmer's cabin from the early 19th century, its wood darkened by smoke; typically rough-hewn Finnish dir-ing tables that were deliberately slanted toward the lower end, as if to carry any spilled drinks or viands into the laps of lesser guests; a miniature portrait of Peter the Great of Russia; who had pushed back Swedish-Finnish fron-ners already in the 18th century, and a costume of a Finnish peasant woman with a sheathed dagger on a chain across her bosom.

The dagger is characteristic of all Finnish women's costumes," said the museum guide. "Where is your dagger?" I inquired:

"I left it in the office," she replied, with a

In 1 tablespoons corn, peanut or vegetable oil 1 tablespoon button Gaudi developed a number of styles, from a Moorish effect in his early years, through experiments with Gothic and Baroque, to a type of structure that he called equilibrated, designed to stand on its own without internal bracing or external buttressing. After the turn of the century, his designs are personal state-ments that dely conventional description, but the overall feel puts them in the contemporary catch-all style known as Art Nouveau or, in Spain, Modernista. Antonio Gaudi y Cornet was born in 1852 in or near the Catalan city of Reus. His futher, grandfather and great-grandfather were pot-narily bright ceramic decoration, is also true of the rest of his work. In his determination to get ters. His buildings were often influenced by the mountainous and maritime character of Catalonia, and he is said to have been greatly influenced in his architecture by the plastic away from the elassical. Gaudi created a unique, instantly recognizable style. It tends to possibilities of pottery making.

A visitor to Barcelona in search of Gaudi elicit admiration or outrage, but never indiffermight stan in the Ciudadela Park, elose to the port. Here the young Gaudi, having finished his studies, collaborated on the monumental fountain and other details, though his influence was none too obvious to this observer. The trail warms up in the Plaza Real, just off the Ramblas, where the iron street lamps are all his own work. Wrought iron work is a constant Gaudi feature.

But for a real introduction to the typically Gaudiesque, the searcher could start on the other side of the Ramblas, at the Güell Palace on the Conde del Asalto. On the approach, look for the brightly ornamented chimneys that are said to have surprised Picasso so much on his comings and goings to his studio in the same street. The palace, built between 1886 and 1891 as a town house for a wealthy count, is now a museum of the theater, and open to

The street is narrow and the buildings tightly squeezed in. To obtain the magnificence of a palace, Gaudi relied on an inward-looking aspect, concentrating a huge variety of detail in such things as roofs, doors and windows around a courtyard with a starred dome. There are, for instance, more than 40 types of column in the house.

A brisk walk north along the Ramblas, across the Plaza Cataluña and along the Paseo de Gracia will bring you to the Casa Batlló, built 1904-1906. You cannot miss it, It is the house on the left with a roof like a dragon's spine and balconies like a highway robber's mask. And yet in the delicacy of the columns and curved outlines of the windows, Gaudi achieved a lightness of touch seldom seen in a city street. The house is not open to the public, and so the marvelous aspect of the first-floor windows, the carved bannisters, the blue-uled courtyard and the arched corridors are the exclusive privilege of the people who live and

A little further along on the other side of the street is the Casa Milà (1906-1910), also known as La Pedrera, a buge, rather dark apartment block, lightened by the flowing curves that Gaudi used to get away from the rigid straight lines of urban architecture. From a distance can be seen the menacing booded figures that serve as chimneys and, close up, the magnifi-cent wrought iron work of the balconies and the main entrance gate. What cannot be seen, because the Casa Milá, too, is not open to the general public, is the detail of the interior, the sweep of the terrace and the decoration of the

Abandon the Casa Milà, as Gaudi did before it was finished, leaving it to be adulterated by other hands, and take the Metro north to Lesseps. North again through winding streets is the Guell Park. It was to have been a residential garden suburb, a modernist vision of the urban environment. With only two plots sold, one to Gaudi himself, the project flopped. The views that were to be the preserve of the bouseholders are now everyone's. The park is open to the public.

The large square that was to have been a market, a theater and a recreation center is ceramic decorations of the snaking bench and roof of the colonnade. Here you might take a cool drink at the café on the upper terrace and conjure up the vision of Gaudi making a naked workman sit on a layer of plaster to produce the exact profile he needed to finish off the bench, In this park, also, is the Gaudi museum. containing, notably, some fine furniture. Before leaving, look out toward the sea and pick out the spires of the Sagrada Familia.

As he worked on the church commissioned in 1883, Gaudi became increasingly pious. About 1910, he abandoned nearly all other work and eventually went to live in his work-

Gaudi meant the Sagrada Familia to dominate the Barcelona skyline, Modern buildings have destroyed that aim, but the cathedral is still an impressive sight, Approached from be-hind the buildings on the Avenue Diagonal, it can be something of a shock at first sight. Its spiral spires owe nothing to traditional church architecture. They are topped with words of praise in huge lettering and bright crosses embedded with ceramics.

Go inside - the church is open during working hours - and climb around in the lowers, looking down and outward to appreciate the detail of the stonework. Compare the baroque exterior of the Nativity Facade, with its clusters of sculpted figures, to the clean lines of the inner face. This is thought by many to be Gaudi's crowning achievement. It was certainly his last. The towers with their multicolored ups that top the facade are the last thing that

For the cognoscenti, there are many more buildings by Gaudi to be seen in Barcelona and the surrounding area. But the amateur, armed with a sense of the Gaudiesque, might be content with spotting indications of Gaudi or his influence in the architecture, and particularly the wrought-iron work, around Barcelo-

Such soups seem to have a universal popularity, and for an obvious reason: They have a long-lasting storage life that makes them available throughout the year. The kitchens of Sweden are celebrated for their yellow-pea soup, those of Cuba for a black-bean soup and those of Egypt for a chickpea soup delicately scented

When we dined several months ago in the home of Linda and Saleh Makar in Glendale, California, one of the courses was the Egyptian chickpea soup. It was created by the Cairo-born Salch, who is an excellent amateur cook, especially with dishes native to the land of his birth. The Egyptian name of the dish is shorba

The second soup outlined here is our version of a black-bean soup. It is not necessarily of Cuban origin, but it is good and bracing when served with a crusty loaf of well-made bread.

Freshly ground pepper to taste 1½ tablespoors finely chopped parsley Lemon wedges Freshly grated Parmesan cheese.

 Put the chickpeas in a mixing bowl, and add three cups of the water and salt. Let stand 2. Drain the beans but reserve the soaking iquid. Add enough additional water to make 3. Heat the oil and butter in a heavy kettle, and add the garlic, onions, celery and carrots. Cook, stirring, until the onions are wilted. Sprinkle with cumin and flour, stirring to coat the ingredients evenly. Add the reserved four cups of water, stirring rapidly with a wire whisk. Add the peas, broth, tomatoes, bay leaf, salt and pepper. Stir until the liquid comes to the boil. Cover and let simmer over low heat 4. Add the rice. Cover and let simmer 20

5. Ladle about one cup of the chickpeas, rice and vegetables into the container of a food processor or blender. Add a little liquid and blend thoroughly. Return this to the kestle. Add the parsley and stir to blend. 6. Remove the bay leaf and serve in individual soup bowls with lemon wedges. Serve with grated Parmesan cheese, to be sprinkled over the soup according to individual taste. Yield: Four to eight servings.

BLACK-BEAN SOUP t normd black beans 2 smoked ham bocks, about 1½ pounds

Salt to taste, if desired 2 cups beef or chicken broth, approximately 1½ tablespoons ofive oil 1½ cups finely chopped, seeded, cored green

1½ cups finely chopped onions 1 tablespoon finely minced garlie 1 teaspoon ground cumin s cup peeled, seeded, diced tomatoes 4 cup red-wine vinegar 2 tablespoons finely chopped, fresh coriander,

1. Put the beans, ham hocks, water and salt in a kettle, and bring to the boil. Cover and let simmer between 1 bour 45 minutes and 2 hours 30 minutes, or until the beans are thoroughly

2. Remove the ham hocks and set them 3. Drain the beans, and reserve both them and the cooking liquid. There should be about six cups of beans and four cups of liquid. Add enough broth to the liquid to make six cups. 4. Put the beans in the container of a food processor or blender, and blend as thoroughly as possible. Add a little of the liquid and continue blending. Combine the purced beans and remaining liquid in a large bowl.

5. Heat the oil in a heavy kertle, and add the peppers, onions, garlic and cumin. Cook, stirring, until the onions are wilted. Add the tomatoes and vinegar. Let simmer about 15 minutes. 6. Meanwhile, remove the meat from the skin and bones of the ham bocks, and chop the meat. There should be about one cup. Set aside. Discard the skin and bones. 7. Add the puréed bean mixture to the cooked tomato mixture. Add the chopped ham and contander.

8. Serve in hot soup bowls with a tablespoon or so of sherry, if desired, in each serving. Yield: Eight to 12 servings.

Whatever the origin, the soup is getting attention. A French restaurant in Washington recently added a Senate-style bean soup to its menu. The producers of "The Lawmakers," a Public Television program about Congress, decided to have Olney compare it with the Senate version. Levin; Olney and the moderator, Paul Duke, sat in ornate, carved wooden chairs for the test of the Senate soup, which was ladled into glass bowls that rested on white china

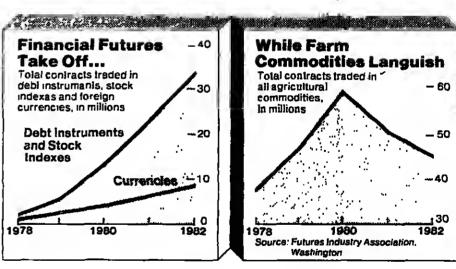

"We're the only state that has a product on the Senate menu," Levin told Olney, a reference to the "History of Senate Bean Soup" that appears on the menu, "We're No. 1 in a lot of agricultural products, including navy beans." At another point, Levin, tongue-in-cheek, told Olney, "This bean soup is taking the place of chicken soup as the cure for all ailments." The soup, from a Senate Office Building restaurant, was brought to Levin's office in plastic-foam cups. "I think it's good," Olney said. "You can taste the ham bone. They [the beans] need to be salted at the end. A little pepper wouldn't hurt, butter too.'

New 8mm Video-Recorder Format Expected to Gain Support Slowly

DARIS — When Eastman Kodak announced plans recently to market an 8mm (slightly more than ¼-inch) videocassette camera-recorder in one portable unit, other consumer-electronics companies rushed to show er along the Bahnhoistras that they, too, had an amm product waiting in the wings.

Many industry watchers have predicted that a move to the 8mm videotape standard would herald the end of Betamax, VHS and V2000. the incompatible 1/2-inch tape formats currently used for in-home and portable recorders. The new 8mm video systems will be based on an industrywide technical standard established at a meeting of 128 electron-

Some video," said Jim Bottoms, a consultant with Mackintosh International, management consultants in London. "But we don't think that it will be an overnight campaign."

Kodak and General Electric announced two weeks ago that they will market 8mm camera-recorders made by Matsushita. RCA plans to offer a standard developed product, and Philips and Sanyo are expected to market their own 8mm camera-recorders before the end of the year.

The smaller size and lighter weight of 8mm recorders makes them less cumbersome than present systems. But even more important, they present an opportunity for VCR makers to introduce an industrywide standard. The standard defines such specifications as tape speed and recorder-head size, so that tapes recorded on one maker's system can be science should be "shorted". Al $561. standard. Among the ½-inch formats the Matsushita-developed VHS format has made steady gains in the last few months, over Sony's Betamax system and the V2000 system developed jointly by the Netherland's Philips and West Germany's Grundig. The Betamax camp has been depleted by the defections of Toshiba and NEC of Japan and Zenith of the United States, all of which plan to make VHS-based recorders. Philips and Grundig announced that they will make VHS systems for sale outside Europe,

VHS Pre-Eminent

According to most estimates, VHS now accounts for 65 to 75 percent of world VCR sales. This pre-eminence of the VHS system is expected to reinforce the reluctance of Matsushita and its 52-percent-owned affiliate, JVC, to see the 8mm standard appear on the market for in-home recorders. JVC announced Wednesday that it plans to market a VHS camera-recorder later this year.

"We do not think that the ½-inch format will be replaced by the [8mm] standard," said Ken Shimba, a spokeman for Matsushita in the United States. "I think that VHS is becoming the de facto standard."

Other companies that sell VHS systems, such as GE and France's Thomson-Brandt, agree. "That 8mm is the product of the future is one thing," said François Leverye, a spokesman at Thomson, "but VHS still has some good days abead."

Despite their shrinking market share, Sony and Philips also seem to prefer to maintain the technical status quo. Sony introduced a portable camera-recorder last May that uses the 1/2-inch Betamax format. "The current format is being developed to a further stage," said Peter Greatorex, a spokesman for Sony in London.

recorder, prerecorded movies will have to become available on 8mm cassettes and the current playing times of 8mm tapes will have to be extended. And the image quality of the 8mm devices must still be proven to be at least as good as that of existing recorders.

But these technical problems are considered minor and easy to solve—"just dotting the i's and crossing the i's," said Mr. Greatorex.

How quickly they are resolved may depend on consumer reaction to the new camera-recorders and manufacturers' future readiness to promote the 8mm standard. Even its strongest advocates do not expect to see the 8mm format appearing on the in-home VCR market for at least two to the 8mm format appearing on the in-home VCR market for at least two to three years, and they do not expect 8mm to replace 4-inch tapes before the end of the decade.

Judge Bars Getty Pact For 4 Days

LOS ANGELES — Attorneys for three grandchildren of the late J. Paul Getty have won a court order delaying Getty Oil Co.'s record $9.9-billion merger with Texago for Superior Court Judge Richard P. Byrne issued the order Wednesday, blocking the completion of the merger at least until a court hearing Monday.

The petition to delay the merger was filed by the guardian for Stefanie Marie, Cecile Karen Margarita and Christina Terese Getty, daughters of Jean Ronald Getty, the oldest surviving son of J. Pani

The delay was sought on the grounds that the Texaco merger would violate terms of the document that established the main family trust, and that a rival offer from Pennzoil Co. could be more beneficial to the three petitioners.

The court order prevents Gordon P. Getty — a brother of Jean Ronald and the sole trustee of the Sarah C. Getty Trust, which holds 40.2 percent of Getty Oil's stock from "consummating or in any way altering" the trust's agreement to sell its 31.8 million Getty Oil shares

That agreement is part of Texa-Getty Oil's stock for $125 a share, or a total of $9.9 billion. The overall price makes the proposed takeover, announced Jan. 7, the most expensive in history.

Pennzoil had offered to buy up to 20 percent of Getty Oil's stock for $100 a share. It later won a preliminary agreement from Getty Oil and Gordon Getty to convert the company to a private entity, with Pennzoil paying $110 a share for 43 percent of the stock. The remaining 57 percent was to be owned by the trust. That agreemen] fell through when Texaco entered Pennzoil announced Wednes-day, that it was prepared to in-crease its offer to $125 a share for 30 percent of Getty Oil's stock, bul added that it would do so only if Texaco withdrew its offer or was legally prevented from completing the merger, or if Gordon Getty was legally barred from selling the Get-ty trust's stock.

Apple Pins Its Hopes On New Macintosh

By Andrew Pollack

LOS ANGELES - Apple Computer Inc. hopes to dazzle the computer world with its new Macintosh, only a year after pinning its bopes on Lisa, which turned out to be a poor seller.

The new machine will be introduced at the company's annual meeting Tuesday. It is Apple's third and probably last chance to reduce its dependence on the seven-year-old Apple II line amid stiff competition from International Business Machines Corp.

Macintosh, expected to sell for $2,500, is only part of Apple's strategy. The company is also announcing newer, faster versions of its Lisa with an entry price as low as $3,500. It is also expected to announce two new versions of its Apple IIe.

This will be Apple's strongest thrust in years, and many think it will succeed. "They are now putting themselves in contention to be a serious contender in the office environment," said Anthony Morris of Morris Decision Systems, a New York computer dealer, Apple had a number of setbacks in 1983 after several years of breakneck growth, IBM, which entered the personal-computer business in 1981, quickly surged to the lead in terms of revenues and significance. Apple actually sold more computers than IBM did last year — but at a lower price as IBM forced Apple out of the profitable office market and into the home and educational markets.

Apple had no mainstream office computer with which to respond, since its Apple III had never caught on, and the Lisa, priced initially at $10,000, was too expensive.

Meanwhile, Apple's earnings plunged. The company earned only 55.1 million in the quarter ended last Sept. 30. That was 73 percent below the level of a year earlier. John Sculley, Apple's president and chief executive officer, who was hired from Pepsico last spring, has said low earnings would continue for two more quarters.

Despite Apple's woes, however, industry analysts think its new product line can at least consolidate the company's position as No. 2 in the personal-computer business behind IBM. "I think the market needs an alternative to IBM," said James preliminary vote, decided Thursday to delay to as late as June 1985 new long-distance "access" charges for residential and small-business telephone customers.

FCC Tentatively Delays Phone 'Access' Charges

The commission also ruled that the flat monthly charges, which had been scheduled to start April 3 at $2 a month, should be phased in gradually until 1990 and should go no higher than $4.

The FCC, which has been under considerable public and congressional pressure to delay or scrap the new charges, agreed to meet Wednesday to issue a final ruling on the decision.

Jack D. Smith, head of the agency's Common Carrier Bureau, said that the FCC expects to complete its study of the charges by Dec. 1 but that they might not be imposed until late spring or summer next year, perhaps as late as June 1985, because of required procedures. While delaying the added charge to individuals and small businesses will save customers some money. the FCC's chairman, Mark S Fowler, said the action would reduce or eliminate the S1.75-billion decrease in long-distance phone rates that AT&T had planned on, a development Mr. Fowler called most unfortunate."

Under the plan tentatively adopted, the access charges of $6 a line that business customers will pay for their hook-up to long-dis-tance services would go into effect April 3 as scheduled,

The commission decided that long-distance services that are in competition with AT&T, such as MCI and Sprint, would get a 55percent discount for their connecions to local lines, sharply higher than the 20 to 25 percent initially planned by the FCC.

The discount would continue until the quality of the competing companies' connections was improved to equal AT&T's.

The FCC move was related to recommendations in a letter to the commission Wednesday from Senator Robert J. Dole, Republican of Kansas, and 31 other senators, mostly Republicans, Mr. Smith said the agency's position was "not inconsistent" with proposals outlined by the senators. The FCC said the decision to to saying that the flat monthly ac-cess fee should be delayed until 1985, recommended that if the commission decided that access charges "should be ordered sometime during this decade, they be capped at a maximum of $4 and that small rural [telephone] companies be exempt from the order due to the high cost of those opera-tions," Mr. Dole said. The senators also proposed a change in the discounted rates paid by competing long-distance companies for their connections to lo-cal lines, which are of lesser quality than AT&T's. The letter said a charge based on actual minutes used, without a substantial reduction of the discount, should be

By Stuart Auerbach

Washington Post Service WASHINGTON - Vice President George Bush pledged Thurs-day that the Reagan administration id continue to resist pressures for more trade protection, which be said "are mounting" as a result of policies being pushed by Demo-cratic presidential candidates.

But he also acknowledged in answer to a question that President Ronald Reagan granted additional protection to the U.S. textile industry last month because of a comnitment "made in our campaign for re-election four years ago."

"We have some areas where we are something less than pure in terms of free trade. Textiles is one of them," Mr. Bush said in the keynote address to a conference on Economic Interdependence and the future of World Trade spon-sored by the International Herald Tribune and Trade Net, a private advocacy group working to further free trade objectives.

He suggested that Mr. Reagan, who overruled most of his key advisers in making the decision to further curb textile imports, might impose greater restriction in order to keep his campaign pledge to protect U.S. markets from increasing mports of foreign textiles. William A. Niskanen Jr., a member of the President's Council of Economic Advisers who opposed the increased curbs on textile im-

Foundation Sells Off 19 Properties In New York for Total of $400 Million

CHICAGO (AP)—The MacArthur Foundation has sold 19 properties in New York City, including the 42-story Gulf & Western Building, in a $400-million transaction described as the largest single commercial realestate parchase ever completed.

The properties were sold Wednesday to First Winthrop Corp. of Boston to comply with a 1969 federal law requiring foundations to divest themselves of excess business holdings, officials announced.

The MacArthur Foundation, one of the 10 wealthiest private philan-thropic organizations in the United States, is known for the fellowships it gives without conditions to "exceptionally talented individuals." The federal law was designed to prevent abuse of foundations' tax-exempt status and restricts ownership of more than 20 percent of any

The purchase totals nearly 5 million square feet (450,000 square meters) of commercial space in Manhattan, including buildings on Park Avenue, Broadway, Madison Avenue and Fifth Avenue. We believe this is the largest single commercial real estate purchase ever completed, " said Arthur J. Halleran Jr., president of First Winthrop.

Trusthouse Forte Posts Record Profit

LONDON (AP) - Trusthouse Force PLC, Britain's largest hotel and catering group, which owns the TraveLodge and Excelsior hotel chains in the United States, said Thursday its profit in the year ended Oct. 31 rose 32 percent to a record £62 million ($87.4 million), from £46.8 million the Revenue rose 10 percent to £1.01 billion from £915.4 million in 1982. Pre-tax trading profit rose to £134.8 million from £111.8 million. - All divisions; particularly hotels, contributed to the record results, Trusthouse said. Hotel operations in Britain had profit of £50.7 million up from £41.7 million, while hotel operations in the United States earned £12.5 million, up from £8.8 million a year earlier.

Caterpillar Narrows 4th-Quarter Loss

PEORIA, Illinois (AP) — Caterpillar Tractor Co. says it sharply narrowed its fourth-quarter loss, and said that if special charges were excluded, it would have posted a slight profit.

Despite the improved result, the heavy equipment maker wound up with a record loss of $345 million for the entire year. In 1982, it reported a $180-million loss. The company said 1983 sales totaled $5.42 billion, down from $6.27 billion a year earlier, as a result of depressed economic conditions worldwide

A $15-million charge, associated with the planned closing of three plants, contributed to a $11-million loss in the final quarter, but sales mcreased to $1.77 billion from $960 million a year earlier, Caterpillar said Wednesday. The company had a fourth-quarter loss of $204 million in the

Chris-Craft Buys 19% of Warner

NEW YORK (NYT) - The battle for control of Warner Communications Inc. has taken a turn against Rupert Murdoch, the Australian publishing magnate, with Chris-Craft Industries Inc.'s announcement that it has acquired 15.2 million shares of a new preferred stock representing about 19 percent of Warner.

The purchase Wednesday, made minutes after the Federal Trade Commission approved the sale, effectively reduced Mr. Murdoch's hold-

Salomon Brothers International won the mandate to act as lead manager for the notes. Market professionals said that eight to 10 banks or groups of banks bid for the lead role. The intense competition reflects banks' desire to lend to top-quality borrowers and may tempt more European countries back into the market.

The notes mature in 20 years, but buyers have the option to redeem after 15. Denmark can call the notes in after four years.

The price is par, or 100, and the interest rate floats at three-sixteenths percentage point over the six-month London joterbank offered rate (Libor). Libor Thursday was quoted at 10 percent. Denmark is paying the banks a commission of just five-eighths percent on the Rival houses said they were surprised that Salomon offered such 'tight" terms. With the commission so low, one trader sneered, "I think they re doing it for love."

Traders reported that the notes changed hands at around 99.25 before Salomon moved in with support buying and oudged the price up to around 99,40. At that level, the issue would be just within the range at which the managers could show profits.

Denmark also tapped the Japanese market Thursday. Io Tokyo. Yamaichi Securities Co. aooounced that it had been chosen as lead manager for 15 billion yen ($64.4 million) of 10-year bonds. The issue carries a 7.7 percent in-terest coupon and was priced at 99.95, to yield 7.708 percent, Ya-

However, Macintosh's relatively small memory is expected to limit its capacity, especially compared with Lisa, to simultaneously dis-play different programs in different "windows" on the screen and to move information from one program to another.

Sources say the computer at first will come with two programs: MacWrite, a word-processing program, and MacPaint, which allows users to draw images on the screen by moving the mouse. MacPaint even allows users to do the equivalent of spray painting an image on the screen. COLOGNE — Ford-Werke AG said Thursday it expects to consolidate its West German market share in 1984 after in creasing it to 12 percent in 1983 from 11.3 percent in 1982

A spokesman for the Ford Motor Co. unit said delays averaging three months in new-model production had prevented the company from achieving a market share goal of 12.5 per-cent. He said a 1984 target has not been set, but 12 percent would be "more or less right."

THREE rather similar books have been I published at about the same time. Of the three the book by Richard Hough is far the best and for two good reasons. In the first place, he has much that is new to say, partly because he stands on the shoulders, as it were, of the late professor Arthur Marder, the pre-eminent modern naval historian of World War L to all of whose papers he had access. The result is an important narrative to which the publishers have done justice with 41 plates and 11 maps and diagrams. Nor is the narrative all Hnugh has to offer. He also includes pen portraits of the main characters — notably Admirals Fisher, Jellicoe, Beatty — and a very well balanced discussion of the more crucial events, particularly the last great ship-to-ship encounter between opposing surface fleets, that of the British Grand Fleet and the Ger-man High Seas Fleet off Jutland in 1916. He is particularly successful in seeing that men of great distinction have failings as well as merits, no one of them being always right. Churchill, he says, was "a brilliant peacetime First Lord for the needs of the Royal Navy between 1912 and 1914," even if his letters, or at least one of them could be described by the prime minister, Asquith, as "begotten by froth out of foam." By contrast Hough concludes that "his leadership in war had very few redeeming features." Many mistakes were due to his "fussing over everyone and everything causing dismay and resentment." In summarizing the case for and against both Jellicoe and Beatty the author is anything but partisan. Churchill, however. who wrote a good deal of nonsense about Jutland," very justly described Jellicoe as "the

it's different and it will not only help my event but all Americans." Scott has been living and training in Scottsdale, Arizona, and be is getting ready for the indoor season. He plans to compete in five meets, beginning with the Sunkist Invitational on Friday in Los Angeles. But he won't be going against Ire-land's Eamonn Coghlan, the world indoor mile record-holder. Cogh-lan has a stress fracture of the tibia bone in his right leg and will not compete indoors this season.

Scott has run the second-fastest outdoor mile of all time, 3:47.69, and he's the U.S. indoor mile re-cord-holder at 3:51.8. He is usually second to Coghlan on the boards. He was second in the 1,500 meters to Britain's Steve Cram in the world track championships last August in Helsinki.

Second. Second. It's a frustrating litany for the 27-yearold miler. Scott is aware that being second best in the United States in almost anything gets scant recogni-tion. But he lives with that. What disturbs him is being criticized for running what some writers called a dumb race in losing to Cram at

"It wasn't like I didn't make the finals or that I finished last," Scott said. "I was second by two-tenths of a second [3:41.59 to 3:41.87]. I was so close. How can it he a stupid

Scott's tactics were questioned 65-second first lap — that ultimately benefited Cram, who has a blazing kick. Said Aouita of Morocco had the lead with 500 meters left, followed by Cram and Scott, Cram passed Aouita going into the final turn with about 200 meters left. But Scott didn't kick precisely when

"Cram went by Aouita and then I came up on Aouita's shoulder," Scott said "Aouita sped up and held me off. I ran three yards long-the backstretch I should have made a charge to go around both of them and, if Cram went with me. I'd at least he on his shoulder in the last 200 meters.

"It was a judgment call that I made at that particular second. I because he allowed a slow pace - a felt like we were going quick enough and I thought I could reel Cram in oo the last home stretch. Cram went around Aouita, but Aguita held me off and the distance opened between myself and Cram. I was gaining on Cram but there was too much ground to make up."

So Scott lost a tactical race, and in many major championship meets, such as the Olympics, a tactical race is the format. Scott wants a faster first lap next summer bul he doesn't necessarily want to be er [on the outside] and that was the pace-setter. "I don't want to be basically the difference at the end. stuck with the lead because, no factor."

Scott will undoubtedly have a different race plan for the Olympic 1,500 final. His major competition, he said, will likely come from Cram, Aouita and Ovett, who fin-ished fourth at Helsinki, and possibly Sydney Marce of the United

Plunkett's Season Far From Super Raiders' Quarterback Survives Up-and-Down Year

By Alan Greenberg Los Angeles Times Service

TAMPA, Florida - Jim Plunkett's National Football League career has been one part House of Horrors, one part Fantasy Island.

These days it's Fantasy Island as the Raiders' quarterback prepares to lead his team into Super Bowl XVIII Sunday against the Wash-ington Redskins. Whenever Plunkett leaves his hotel room, he's engulfed by fans and reporters. To the Raiders, the 36ear-old veteran is a lot more popular than he was three months ago -Oct. 19 - when Coach Tom Flores called Plunkett into his office and 10ld him he was benched.

That was the House of Horrors part for Plunkett. Many thought it was the final plunge of his turbu-lent, often-traumatic 13-year pro

Jim Plunkett has been written off as often as a business lunch, And always, it has been Plunkett who was left with the bitter aftertaste, while others wiped their hands and

He has been handsomely warded — the Raiders paid him $560,000 this season — but how much money does it take to compensate for being told you're no longer good enough to be No. 1? "I wish my career had been a soaring eagle." Phinkett said, "but it doesn't always work out that Plunkett was benched following a 38-36 loss to the Scattle Scahawks think he expected to break a world matted eight numovers. Five of them were Plunkett's doing three interceptions, plus two fum-bles that the Scahawks converted into touchdowns. Someone asked Phinkers if he'd "Probably," he said. "I've had who holds the world record for the some really tough times out there."

But not early in the 1983 season. ble if he is in the proper condition. Plunkett had led the Raiders to an "I think Coe will stick to the 800 8-1 record during the 1982 strikebecause he has a psychological bar-nier to overcome," Scott said. "He res made him the starter this year has the top three times ever in the even though quarterback Marc 800 but has never won a major Wilson had clearly outperformed championship at that distance."

Plunkett performed with work-manlike efficiency. He had only three passes intercepted as the Raiders went undefeated through Plunkett's season began coming apart the next week in a 37-35 loss to the Redskins. Despite finishing the game with 372 yards passing, he had four passes intercepted — three in the first quarter — and put an incredible strain on the defense.

He had two more passes interepted in the first quarter the following week against Kansas City as the Chiefs took a 14-0 lead, but the Raiders rallied to win, 21-20.

Then came the Seattle disaster. Plunkett was removed with 4:32 to olay, and Wilson was brought ou his first regular-season action. At the time, Plunkett said that elevating Wilson was, "maybe something that needs to be done. Maybe Marc will give us something we haven't had, more consistency." It was clear the job was Wilsoo's inless he messed up mightily and metal screws put in it, and Plunkett got the Raiders back to where they'd been early in the season. He led them to five straight victories.

This time around, Plunkett was better rested — and wiser. He threw more short patterns and didn't force the ball downfield into tight coverage.

There was no doubt I was fresher when I came back," Plunkett said. "I'm oot throwing the ball down the field quite as much, but the main thing is the offensive line is playing so much better. The time [to find a receiver] is there. The guys up front are making a big Plunkett won't say if he feels vindicated by the way this season has turned out. But oow that he's back in the linenp, he says he doesn't believe he deserved to be benched.

But he is the first to admit that he's not the quarterback be was. Time and again in the early part of the season his receivers beat the coverage deep, only to see the ball underthrown, usually resulting in an incompletion or an interception. Plunkett simply can't reach them. He was part of only one pass

NHL Canucks Fire Coach Neilson

VANCOUVER, British Columbia (AP) — Roger Neilson was fired Thursday as head coach of the Vancouver Canucks and replaced behind the bench by General Manager Harry Neale for the balance of the National Hockey League season. Neale said the Canucks had been "underachieving" for the last 1½ years under Neilson. It was the third time Neilson has been fired by an NHL team. He previously was head coach of Toronto and Buffalo. "I'm like a lot of other people," Neilson said after the announcement. "I'm looking for a job."

By Ru. cill Baker
NEW YORK — Here are the bare bones of the case:

A young woman eoters a friedchicken establishment carrying a $10 bill to purchase a small quantity of the house specialty. A young man, whom she knows casually. enters behind her. There is a hrief contretemps, the young woman exits to find a policeman, finds two and tells them the young man has snatched her chicken mooey. The policemeo arrest bim. He is charged with feloniously stealing the chicken money by forcibly removing it from the young woman's

As a police reporter 35 years ago. I saw justice done in hundreds of such affairs, and it was done with dispatch and efficiency. The cops haled the accused man immediately to police court, where a magistrate istened to both sides of the story. If he believed the woman, he checked with the cops to discover if the young man was a consistently bad actor.

If he was, the magistrate might send him to the hoosegow for 30 days. If he wasn't, the magistrate might give him a brief sentence, suspend it and talk to him like a Dutch uncle, warning him that another offense would cost him 30 years in stir. Next case!

But stay. Not so swiftly. The course of justice, as I recently discovered at some cost to my digestion and wallet, has become more complex since I last idled in police courts. This very case, the case of the snatched chicken money, came to trial in New York recently while my wife was on jury duty.

Sworn to secrecy by the court, she could not reveal the nature of the crime until the case was settled, but confided that the jury selection had taken three days and said the case was apparently complex, since the judge had advised jurors to bring pajamas, toothbrushes and other equipment oecessary to survive a long bout of jury deadlock, Naturally, I assumed the case must involve a complicated embezzlement scheme, a corporate coospiracy to defraud the public, or homicide, so was oot amazed when a bailiff phoned at 8 P.M. on the third day of the trial to inform me that the jury had been locked up for the night in a hotel and that I must make my own dinner.

Previous experience had prepared me for a sleep fraught with nightmare, and I was not disappointed. The following day, aware that it might be weeks before she could again turn her hand to hollandaise and crab gumbo, and determined oot to suffer another night of agony, I proposed a restaurant visit with two friends.

Sure enough, the bailiff phoned again to report that the jury bad dined and was resuming its deliberations. The restaurant dinner this is New York, remember -cost me $50. All right, I had a drink. Maybe two.

My wife had just arrived home when I returned at 11 P.M. Io precise detail, she related the story of the snatched chicken money. She is a woman who likes to have her little joke, so when she finished I said, "Very witty, and oow tell me the real story. Was it a kidnap-

"She said this young man took her chicken mooey. That was the case," she said. "Surely there is more to it than that. When did it happen?"

"Eleveo mooths ago," she said. "But when I was a kid reporter they tried that kind of case two hours after it happened and the judge settled it in 90 seconds."

"Don't blame me because you're getting old," she said.

I don't want to be one of those cranks who hate to see an accused man enjoy his day in court, but this incident has shaken my faith in American justice. Faced with a case that could be disposed of within 24 hours, it had taken 11 months to bring it to trial, three days to pick a jury, two days to record the evidence and two days for the jury to reach a verdict, which turned oot to be "petty larceny."

It would have made more sense if the state had offered the young woman a $20 bribe and a free box of fried chicken to abandoo her complaint. Still, maybe it was worth it for the pleasure it gave my wife, who likes her little joke. She oow boasts that, having been locked up for a night by order of the court, she has spent more time in custody than most New York

Cher Trying to Shed Glitter Image

By Janet Maslin New York Times Service

NEW YORK — She sur-prised everyone with her well-received appearance in Robert Altman's film "Come Back to the Five and Dime, Jimmy Dean, Jimmy Dean." Now she has given a supporting performance in Mike Nichols's "Silkwood" that has won her glowing notices. But Cher says she doesn't quite feel like an overnight sensation. Her recent acting successes, she says, were preceded by "eight years in which I couldn't get a job in

When Cher was chosen for her "Silkwood" role as Dolly Pelliker, the blue-collar, lesbian friend of Meryl Streep as Karen Silkwood, Nichols said it was her "vitality, humor, and surprising depth" that won her the role.

But according to Nora Ephron, the film's co-screenwriter with Alice Arlen: "It was a very hard part to cast because of all the things Dolly couldn't be. She couldn't be blonde. She couldn't be really beautiful, or it would seem too bizarre to find two really beautiful women working in the middle of Crescent, Oklahoma. And she had to seem young, because the person the part is very loosely based on was only 19 at the time."

By her own account, Cher had wanted to be an actress all along, but ever since she met Sonny Bono and he belped transform her into the glittery, attentiongetting creature that is Cher, her mage had been distracting. She had long been too visible as a singer, television star and clotheshorse to be taken seriously by those who might have sent acting work her way.

"People always said the same thing, and it was 'Oh, you're too Cher," she recalled. Playing Dolly, the plutonium-plant worker, Cher dressed in pants belonging to a male crew member (he's a size 33; Cher is size 27). flat shoes (boots make ber legs look too long) and a baggy T-shirt, with the whole outfit made even uglier by several extra sets of under-

Glamour roles bad been among the few parts offered to ber in the past. Among the films for which she had previously been man's wife and Cher's mother are considered were "King Kong" ("I was pregnant at the time, or else I probably would bave done it, just to work") and "The Fish That Saved Pittsburgh" ("I thought, vou just can't be any good with all the odds against you").

"Most of the time I couldn't even get interviewed for things, not even for TV movies," she said. "And I couldn't find an agent who would handle me for pictures alone. They would agree to take me, but what they really wanted was Las Vegas and that other stuff. And so I'd be with someone for a couple of months, and oothing would happen, and I'd have to move on."

Finally, after watching Linda Ronstadt on stage in "The Pirates of Penzance," Cher decided to pursue an acting career in New York, She knew Lee Strasberg, had decided to take a class with him and was auditioning for Joseph Papp when an opportunity presented itself. Cher's mother telephoned Altman oo an unrelated matter (Altfriends), and somehow this led to Cher appeariog io "Jimmy Dean." "I got a script on Sunday, and by Tuesday I had a joh," Cher recalled.

Nichols and Ephron saw Cher in Altman's stage production of "Jimmy Dean." which preceded the film. "There she was," recalls Ephron. "She was so close to the Dolly part that it was as though was auditioning with the

When Nichols offered her the role, Cher agreed to play it without even asking to see a script. which prompted another call from Nichols two weeks later.

"He said, 'I bave to tell you something,' " Cher recalled. This is a wonderful part. She's a lesbian, but she's a wonderful leshian.' 1 said 'OK, fine, it doesn't bother me." "Cher had come to see me for

'Carnal Knowledge,' and I liked ber very much but in the end we agreed there was no role for her," Nichols recalled. "Because she is kind of a pop go on in front of an audience and in front of the camera," Nichols said. "That's a big part of her personality, and it unquestionably comes from having been a performer for so long." Nonetheless, so ingenuous was Cher during the filming that, as the movie progessed in sequence and the actors grew more serious, Cher became more and more upset by the material.

"There was a scene toward the end of the film where I had to get up and leave, because I was almost bysterical," Cher said. "It was the scene when the doctors are telling Karen that she's not badly contaminated. I knew the doctors were lying, and Meryl was made up to look like she was going to die. Suddenly, I looked at her and thought: This happened to a real person. And if Meryl were dying I don't think I could stand it." At the age of 37, at the start of what may be a oew career, Cher is hopeful that "Silkwood" will bring more acting offers, and she's ready to take on different kinds of stage and screen roles. It remains to be seen whether Cher's simply being Cher will continue to be an occupational obstacle. In any case, see that that ber reputation for flamboyance is greatly exaggerated. "I don't drink to speak of, and I don't take drugs at all," she said. "I take care of my two children. I've been married twice, once for 11 years and once for three years. I don't go out with more than one man at a time. But you know what it is? I dress strangely. That's what I do. Maybe people don't understand about that, but it's something like. I'm certainly not going to

Auction of Turners Fails

Wednesday for two scenes of Venice painted by the British artist J.W.M. Turner, but the owners rejected the bids as too low. Life Friend, a spokeswoman for Christie's in New York, said that the minimum was "confidential — even I don't know it." Friend said $1.4 million was the high bid for "Going to the Ball (San Martino)" and $1.2 million was the high bid for "Returning from the Ball (St. Martha)." She said the paintings will go back to the owners, who may work out a private sale.

The singer Diana Ross Wednesday donated $250,000 to construct a playground she had promised to huild with profits from her raindelayed Central Park concert. Ross was criticized two weeks ago when city officials disclosed the concert last July failed to produce a penny for the promised playground proect, which Ross described as a ongtime "dream." The singer presented Mayor Edward Koch with a check. The concert was disrupted by a violent rainstorm and had to be done again the next night. Ross said the rain delay was a major factor in the concert's failure to dridge, Teooesee, admitted Wednesday it cut off power to a home for the retarded and mentally ill, leaving 23 elderly patients shiv-ering in their beds for 11 hours, to collect a $400 overdue bill. "As cruel as it may seem, disconnection is the only way to get the money, said Tom Underwood, office manager for the Appalachian Electric Cooperative, Sheriff Tom Eslinger said be learned about the patients plight and found them crying and cold in the state-licensed Phoenix House Nursing Home's two buildings Tuesday night. "I have no doubt that some of those old people might have died if we had not gotten to them when we did." Eslinger said. "They were wrapped up in everything they owned — towels, blankets — you name it." The utility restored power after Eslinger notified the company's officials. Un-derwood said the noo-profit home's owner. Lorraine Roberson. had failed to pay two months of bills even though utility service men went there three times to try to
